Mr. Brooks, of Philadelphia, is not weeping because Mr. Cooper seems to be in at least a temporary dilemma. He is opposed to the Delaware county statesman's move. The first excuse for tampering with the Brooks' law was that the courts could not under it grant license transters. This was rendered useless by the fact that the Supreme Court of the State decided that the law of 1858, covering that point, was yet in force, and left it in the discretion of the lower courts to grant transfers. Then it was claimed Mr. Fow's bill was made necessary by the fact that Philadelphia judges refused to grant transfers, thereby doing great injustice in many cases. The granting of a transfer recently knocks the bottom out of that, in Mr. Brooks' opinion.

If the measure comes over from the Senate for concurrence, the father of high license will fight it and hopes to defeat it there, if it is not hung up in the other branch. Mr. Brooks admits he doesn't know why Mr. Cooper persists in tampering with the liquor law at this time, but thinks perhaps the gentleman of perennally bopeful temperament is trying to redeem pledges made to the liquor people.

Buckaiew, Stewart and Wolfe,

The gentleman quoted says there are two factions in Lancaster county, known respectively, if not euphoniously, as the bull ring and the hog ring. They originated about ten years ago, when Levi Sensenig, a cattle dealer, wanted the contract to supply the county in struttions with beef, while his rival, John F. Menser, the present Prothonotary of the county, wanted the contract to supply them with park as well as beef. These two are yet leaders of the factions, though Louis S. Hart and J. Hay Brown are probably the active leaders at the present time of the former faction, while E. K. Martin and Elwood Griest are the native leaders of the latter. Bull ring against hog ring was the way the late struggle is described as having shaped itself. Special Notice.
